

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

The Angel Unaware.

Alone on the landscape pale and cold,
Blurred with the pattern of autumn rain,
I gazed and gazed until it could hold
The color faded from earth and sky.
Mists hung low where the light had lain,
And through the willows a tremor came,
Murmured as their branches swept the pane.

"My days must darken as these," I said—
"Out of my life must summer go,
Its radiant memories dim and dead,
Sifted along my pathway as
No more the elastic life comes back—
The leap of heart and spirit back—
That never had come of love or talk,
Whether for me or for you."

But here an eye misty broke a child,
Fresh from a bath in the pouring air,
And looking up, her face was pale and sad,
Breathing no word, but leaving there
A cloud of heartache, blue and sad,
And then she vanished.

And had I known of my child of eyes?
It had followed me in a ring of light
Once I had known her.

Reception at Woman's Club.

A reception was given at the Woman's Club from 3 to 5 P. M. yesterday to the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Woman's Auxiliary, the guests of the week in Richmond.

The tables were handsomely decorated with palms and roses. Ladies receiving were Mrs. L. L. Lewis, Miss Gulliam, Mrs. C. H. Hatcher, Mrs. W. H. Evans, Mrs. C. H. Jones, Mrs. W. C. Starnes, Mrs. A. L. Lick and Miss M. P. Hatcher. Visitors to the reception were introduced by Mrs. D. T. Williams.

Mrs. McLean carried a sheet of American Revolution, and was elegantly dressed in Irish point lace over white satin. She was received with enthusiasm when she entered, and spoke at some length to a most appreciative audience.

She said that everything she had been in her visits to different States she had been greeted the warmest welcome, and her whole observation had but increased her respect for American womanhood. When she was in the South she was completely won to the Southern women, when she was in New England she also found much to admire and enjoy there. She hoped and believed that women in Virginia would always be true to their memories, their traditions and their ideals.

Introductions and handshakings followed, and then Mrs. McLean returned to the Jefferson for an hour's rest and refreshment.

The Journey Onwards

By THOMAS MOORE.

Other selections from this author, his portrait, autograph and biographical sketch, have already been printed in this series.

As slow our ship her foamy track
Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling pennant still look'd back
To that dear isle 'twas leaving.
So loth we part from all we love,
From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, as on we rove,
To those we've left behind us!

When, round the bowl, of vanished years
We talk with joyous seeming—
With smiles that might as well be tears,
So faint, so sad their beaming;
While memory brings us back again
Each early tie that twined us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then
To those we've left behind us.

And when in other climes, we meet
Some isle or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flowery wild and sweet,
And nought but love is wanting;
We think how great had been our bliss
If Heaven had but assigned us
To live and die in scenes like this,
With some we've left behind us!

As travelers oft look back at eve
When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon that light they leave
Still faint behind them glowing,—
So, when the close of pleasure's day
To gloom hath near consigned us,
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of joy that's left behind us.
